

ESSENCE OF...

January 05, 2007

It was the internal spirit that was more beautiful than the outer element vulnerable parts that glorified the creator of the existing.

Great Leadership The slender limb appears not...

John Pringle

Ever realize after a minute how effective and powerful a person can seem after the casts have come off? How blessed are we to know the devotion some parents have invested into their own children.

Imagine the very one who may appear not to have, to have the very qualification and tenacity for the very thing they were designed to perform. Imagine a heavenly designer who nurtured and shaped character and joy in the right person, even shaping their life to fulfill their purpose in the right time.

Now of course, that does not make this or that one designed for your personal purpose, but for their purpose design alone.

Can you figure out how much you may have built up in one place, only to have life come against it. To see how the parts that you built in self manners fail, but the parts that you worked on for the benefit of others seemed to flourish. Perhaps it has not happened yet for you, but it is on the way.

It has been a journey to see what a privilege it is to work for the greater good, and to see its birth and deliverance flourish in another's hand. And oh what great faith has someone received for respecting the young vine and earthen vessels.

It feels like a mold created, cast and poured into, only to see the mold finally broken off as the poured element cured. Through the shaping, firing, and curing to see the beautiful end product.

Now imagine your life being utilized to honorably shape so many others, sometimes during, and mostly after your heart is in right standing.

Faith is powerful, but confidence is built on past success.